Traditional Gründerzeit house tells its story and presents itself in new splendour after extensive renovation

- The past of the MOMA1890 Boutique Hotel in Munich -

MOMA1890, an elegant boutique hotel in Munich's Haidhausen district, looks back on an eventful past. It was built in 1890 and acquired shortly afterwards by Franz Xaver Kroisi, the great-grandfather of the current owners.

The hotel survived the turmoil of the Second World War and the destruction of the neighbouring Ostbahnhof in 1945 almost unscathed. This remarkable consistency in the midst of chaos reflects the steadfastness and will that have always distinguished the hotel.

An iconic moment in the hotel's history occurred in 1962, when the wallpaper in the staircase, which now looks modern again, was installed. This wallpaper, which over the years has become a trademark of the hotel, together with the new MOMA1890 lettering as the official logo, characterizes the values of the house today.

Since the mid-1970s, the house was leased out for more than 30 years until the Seidel family took over the management of the hotel themselves in February 2010. With dedication and care, the family began the extensive renovation work to preserve the building's heritage while bringing in contemporary elements.

Finally, the year 2021 marked a milestone in the hotel's history. The old "Hotel Stadt Rosenheim", popular among guests, changed its name and became "MOMA1890". Today, the concept change and also the renovation work are largely complete, even though not a year goes by in which guests discover innovations in the house.

The MOMA1890 Boutique Hotel invites both guests and visitors to honour the past, enjoy the present and experience a unique combination of history and modernity.
